

Turkey Visiting the Newly Planted Clover!

[print_link]

It was a long hard winter in western New York State in 2014/2015. We wondered how well the wild turkeys would survive? This one looks very healthy. We talked with a couple turkey hunters last week and they had seen turkeys every day they hunted, but so far had not bagged a bird. For most hunters just being in the woods makes the hunting trip an enjoyable experience. Our turkey is visiting a field which contains both an established clover planting in the background and a fall 2014 clover planting in the foreground. We plant Imperial Whitetail Clover. Turkeys are attracted to clover which makes it a good food plot for both turkeys and white tail deer.
